Rochester, New York - Finally, the U.S. Supreme Court will decide a case challenging whether States can seriously restrict pre-viability abortions. Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization squarely questions whether State legislatures can ban abortions (with very limited exceptions) after 15 weeks of pregnancy, the time at which fetuses can feel pain, according to replete scientific data.

In response to the news, Feminists Choosing Life of New York, a human rights organization, issued the following commentary:

"As feminists we applaud the High Court's courage to tackle this issue. The time is ripe for the U.S. Supreme Court to rehumanize another category of humans. Any 'right' to abort children capable of feeling pain, in the name of 'choice,' not only allows for the violent destruction of humans, but degrades pregnant women," said FCLNY Executive Director, Michele Sterlace. "The early feminists, who fought for and won women's suffrage, taught us this – no human should be treated like property."
